

Name: Scott Lang

Role: Director of Facilities Management

RNDC Work Location: Houston, TX

Why is environmental sustainability important to you?

I believe there is a balance that needs to happen between green energy and fossil fuels. We cannot be dependent on just one source, and we need to work towards a better future both environmentally and economically for our children.

How do you contribute to reducing your environmental impact – personal and/or professional? What areas of impact or organizations are you most passionate about?

I am part of an organization called IFMA (International Facility Management Association) and over the last four to five years they have focused on helping Facility Managers in sustainability through education. I hope to achieve my SFP (Sustainability Facility Professional) certification within the next six months and use that certification in my personal and professional life.

Why is the Green Team important and why did you volunteer to be one of the group leaders?

The country is moving towards a more sustainable/green future and companies need to get on board or they will be left behind. In Facilities Management we are at the forefront of designing our facilities to be more sustainable by the products we choose to use and the design concepts that we follow. I believe I can help drive RNDC toward a more sustainable future.
